About Title Insurance

What is title insurance?

Title insurance protects you from losses that occur from various matters affecting the title to land. There are two basic types of policies: Owner's policy to protect the owner, and Loan policy to protect the bank's mortgage.

If the bank requires a Loan policy, why do I need to buy an Owner's policy?

The bank's policy only protects its interest. You, the homeowner, may be liable for title problems even though the bank is insured.

I paid for a title search—why do I need to buy title insurance also?

A title policy insures against many defects which could not be discovered in a title search, as well as insuring against errors made in the title search itself.

Is Owner's coverage expensive?

No. A one time premium covers you throughout your ownership and after. When you are already paying for a loan policy, the additional cost for an Owner's policy is usually small.

What's Covered Under A Standard Owner's Policy?

The standard Owner's policy provides the basic coverage for a homeowner:

- It insures that you are the owner of the property.
- It insures against losses from any liens or encumbrances on the property except those listed in the policy.
- It insures against your title being rejected by a subsequent buyer because it is unmarketable due to a title defect or lien.
- It insures you have a legal right of access to the property.

The title policy not only protects you against losses due to title claims covered by the policy, it also pays for the attorney's fees and costs in defending the title.

You are covered under the policy for as long as you own the property, and also for liability after you sell the property if you provide title covenants in your deed to the new buyer.
